Revised Flathead Forest Plan Delayed Again!

The Flathead National Forest first announced its newly revised Forest Plan would be out in April, followed by the required 60 day public review during which formal Objections to the new Plan can be filed. Then the Flathead moved the date back to June, and again back to late-August.

The Flathead says the delay is due to extensive public comments, public Freedom of Information Act requests and coordination with U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. Will the delay result in a better Forest Plan?

We are wary. In March we discovered the Flathead and FWS were trying to change the long-standing requirement that road culverts in bull trout habitat be inspected every year to prevent blowouts - to once every six years! Neither agency has yet provided any documents in response to our FOIA requests that support the notion that culverts won’t plug and blow out during the five years they are not monitored.

Our 2016 Roads to Ruin report, based on earlier FOIA requests, revealed the Flathead is failing across-the-board to meet mandatory conditions agreed to with FWS to adequately monitor its roads and culverts! Both agencies are now trying to nix those agreements, which are also promises made to the public and its fish and wildlife to minimize environmental damage!

We mustn’t forget that both agencies are also trying to remove Endangered Species Act protection from threatened grizzly bears in both Yellowstone and the Northern Continental Divide ecosystems. So a lot of the delay is to form a paper trail making it look like Forest Plans will take care of the bears when they actually allow increased human pressures and development.

The good news is Cinnabar Foundation issued us another Challenge Grant to continue our fight to protect grizzly bears and bull trout! The first $4,000 in our members’ contributions will be matched by Cinnabar, doubling your donation (page 3)!

Happy Summer and Happy Trails!

Timber Sales Delayed But More in the Making!

The Flathead National Forest will soon release a Supplemental Environmental Assessment for its Glacier Loon timber sale in the Swan Valley. This is in response to a lawsuit we won several years ago with several other groups, which stopped the sale.

The Flathead also withdrew its decision on the nearby Cold Jim timber sale and said it would prepare a Supplemental EA. After the Flathead ignored public comments and formal Objections, Fish and Wildlife Service agreed with Objectors’ finding that the project may adversely affect bull trout.

We’d like to think the Supplemental EAs will result in significant positive changes to the timber sale designs, but most often the Forest Service simply tries to make things look better on paper rather than make improvements on the ground! Unfortunately, this pattern of faulty timber sales is consistent with reports that public land managers intentionally break the law so they can blame the problem on environmentalists that then file lawsuits to enforce America’s environmental laws.

We’re also either being double-teamed by the Forest Service or one hand doesn’t know what the other is doing. We settled our Objection with the Swan Lake District Ranger to his Chilly James Restoration Project when he promised to abide by FWS’s requirement that culverts left in closed roads in bull trout habitat must be inspected each year to keep them from blowing out and smothering bull trout eggs. Meanwhile, the Forest Supervisor is attempting to get FWS to change culvert inspections to an every-sixth-year requirement (see page 1!)

We’re not the only ones disgusted with the Forest Service. The Swan Lake Ranger District held a meeting June 21 to ask the public what it thought about doing some logging to “restore” the area around Weed Lake. The District got an earful from residents of Swan Lake now faced with weed infestations caused by the District’s recent logging of the Swan Lake Fuel Reduction Project.

When we brought up the issue of rampant and unlawful ATV use being the most likely risk for wildfire, residents took notice when the District admitted knowing about both the weed and ATV problems but had done little about them. The District also noted that all eight of the latest fires in the area were human-caused, yet they want to blame fire on the trees, bugs and disease that naturally regulate a healthy ecosystem!

We sent the District photos showing how root rot naturally thins Douglas fir that crowd in on sun-loving Ponderosa pine - with no need for logging or the roads that result in more weeds and more ATV problems. We don’t intend to let up!
